❖ PARISH NOTES

As Jesus prepares to go away, he promises his disciples his “forever presence” in the person of his own Spirit. When we read this pledge in the context of the entire discourse, we realize that what he promises through the Spirit goes beyond the physical presence they have experienced and anything he has already given them. As Jesus speaks about the Spirit that he will send his disciples, the description becomes a mini-discourse on the Trinity. Jesus pledges to the disciples that the Spirit will keep them aware of who he is. Jesus, who had already proclaimed that he is the truth, now promises that the Spirit will guide them to all truth. He says that everything that the Father has is his and promises that the Spirit will give them what belongs to him. If the pronouns in that paragraph have been confusing and you are not sure who “he” is, that is because the three of them are described as one. Jesus taught that he and the Father are one, and that everything that the Father has is his. Now, he says that his work will be carried on through the Spirit, who will share with the disciples what belongs to him — and therefore to the Father. As he puts it a little later, “I in them and you in me” (John 17:23). Classic theology has described the Spirit as the living bond of love between the Father and the Son. In this Gospel, Jesus promises the Spirit as the energy or bond that will bring his disciples to share his own union with God. It is easy to see this as the heady, holy stuff that belongs to mystics in their monasteries. As soon as we begin to think that way, we must remind ourselves that Jesus said this to the gang of bumbler who had walked with him for three years, declared their love, and then run from his suffering. Jesus’ followers were the most ordinary of sinful saints. The example of their lives leaves the rest of us no room to call ourselves too simple, weak or fearful. That is one dimension of the message we hear today in Paul’s Letter to the Romans. Paul is saying that we are “justified,” by which he means that God offers us peace through Christ, that there need be no limits to our hope. And just to be sure we understand, he points out that this has nothing to do with our merits or accomplishments; it is due to God’s love and nothing else. Jesus promised that the Spirit of truth would guide us. Paul explains this by saying God’s love “has been poured out into our hearts.”

❖ THE SPIRIT OF THE LITURGY

The heart visited St.
Joseph Church in Raleigh, May 24 – 25.

It's called incorrupt. It's the heart of St. Jean Vianney, and it dates back to 1786, the year he was born in a small village in France.

The heart, which is a first class relic according to Catholic tradition, has not disintegrated since the saint's death in 1859, has been on a national pilgrimage since. Father Vianney was a priest in a French parish with about 260 people, the attitude toward religion was hostile. Relying on prayer and the sacrament of reconciliation, he began to draw people closer to God. As his reputation spread, people came from throughout Europe to confess to him. His holiness and dedication became so well known that by the end of his life, thousands of people were seeking him for his compassionate heart. When Father Vianney died, Church officials found that his body did not decay in a natural way. Its preservation was viewed as a sign of holiness by God. St. Jean Vianney's incorrupt body, are normally on display at the Shrine of Ars, France. The incorrupt heart pilgrimage was made possible through a grant from the shrine and the Knights of Columbus.
